

GameBoyyz in da Hood

If the brutal cacophony of digital noises coming from the seat in front of you is a GameBoy and is driving you mad, you probably won't be interested in catching the Gameboyzz Orchestra Project live. But if you have a more adventurous pair of ears, you may want to catch the so-called "blip-pop" of the Polish collective. The six piece, each armed with a GameBoy, started playing live in May 2001, when founding member Jarek Kujda finally managed to use his console as a drum machine in another band. Since then, he brought his two sisters and three mates in with their handhelds and began jazzing things up. Their discombobulated electronic music has garnered quite a following, not least with Nintendo themselves, whose Polish distributor sponsors them. If you enjoy the sound of the music speeding up when you are running out of time in Super Mario, then you really ought to check them out live. For a taste of this unique sound, visit www.gameboyzz.com
